VOLUNTEER SPOTLIGHT

How many people can say that they've done everything they wanted to do?

Evelyn Williams can say that.

She wanted to become a registered nurse; she wanted to travel to foreign countries; she wanted to ski and hike and even pilot a small plane; she wanted to help foster children; she wanted to continue working past 65; she wanted to live in a town like Gainesville.

She has done all of those things.

"I've been fortunate," she says. "I've been able to do a lot of things. I am truly blessed, mostly with my children. They're the best part of my life." She has three daughters, one son and five grandchildren.

And the history center is fortunate because she decided to become a volunteer. She works on the desk, in the museum shop, and with Family Day. She has even served as a docent.

Evelyn had lived in Gainesville for several years before she heard about the history center. After she visited, she decided to volunteer.

"The history part of it is great," she says. "It goes back to the Indians and the first Lacrosse game. But Family Day is a wonderful addition. And the most wonderful thing is that the ophthalmologist (Dr. Jeff Payne) sponsors Family Day. Some folks wouldn't come if they had to pay."

Evelyn moved from Atlanta to Gainesville 15 years ago. She was 65, and she'd actually thought about slowing down. She worked with a company that handled worker's compensation cases, and once she was assigned a case—finding out medical needs after someone had an accident at work—she stuck with that case. So it was hard to slow down. She continued working, sometimes traveling 1,000 miles a week, until she was 77. That was three years ago.

"I loved my job," she says.

Piloting small planes started in Perry, Fla., after her then-husband, a medical doctor, took up flying to get to golf courses on weekends. Evelyn decided she should learn to fly in case something happened to her husband during a flight. She got her license and did a lot of flying on her own.

She and her husband traveled internationally, but Evelyn's travels picked up after one of her daughters became an expatriate, teaching social studies and computers in American international schools in foreign countries. She's now in Morocco, and, not surprisingly, Evelyn plans a visit soon. She also visited her daughter in Kenya, Tanzania, and Croatia.

Besides her history center duties, Evelyn volunteers with Safe Havens, a program sponsored by the Presbyterian church that helps foster children bond with their biological parents once the courts approve of reconciliation. She is a member of the Lanier Women's Club and First Presbyterian Church of Gainesville.

She also plays a lot of bridge.

"I do pretty much what I want to," she says, "but not as much as I did when I went skiing and hiking and all those things."

We understand, Evelyn. You've slowed down to a fast walk. And we're delighted you walk into the history center every time you're scheduled. We appreciate what you do.
